NOTE.—This fragment of a genealogy is a small portion of the material gathered for Genealogy of the Waite Family of Malden, which will contain a full account of the descendants of Capt. John Wayte. Material for a like Genealogy of the descendants of Richard Waite of Watertown is in the hands of HENRY E. WAITE, of West Newton, Mass. That these works may be as complete as possible, individuals of the name are requested to communicate with the compilers of the history of their respective families, and to furnish any information in their possession. An apparently unimportant fact may prove of great value. Those who are uncertain of their ancestry may address either Mr. Waite, as above, or the subscriber, giving such facts as may be within their knowledge.

WAITE FAMILY OF MALDEN, MASS.

1. SAMUEL WAITE, of Wethersfield, co. Essex, Eng., was the progeni-ır of the Waites of Malden, and probably of those of Ipswich. The 'andler MSS. and the recently discovered Redington letter enable us to ɔrm an apparently complete list of his family. He married Mary Ward. he appears in Candler's pedigree of Ward, in the Bodleian library, to have een dau. of Ward of Rivenhall, co. Essex; but the earlier MS. of Candr, in the British Museum, as I am informed by Mr. Dean, shows that this nay not have been intended. Other circumstances render it possible, peraps probable, that she was daughter of the Rev. John Ward of Haverill, co. Suffolk, and Susanna his wife. If so, she was sister to the celerated Nathaniel Ward of Ipswich, N. E. Children:

i. MARY,[2] m. in England, Robert Lord, afterwards clerk of the courts and register of deeds in the county of Essex, New England, who d. at Ipswich, Aug. 21, 1683, æt. 79.
ii. SAMUEL,[2] m. Helen Crosse, and d. before March, 1676–7, leaving issue, of whom was Joseph,[3] considered by his friends "a prodigall," yet "not all so bad as formerly."
2. iii. JOHN,[2] b. about 1618.
iv. JOSEPH,[2] m. Margaret, dau. of Matthew Lawrence, "Towne preacher of Ipswich." He was rector of Sproughton, co. Suffolk, where he d. June 29, 1670, "after 15 years of conscientious and eminently faithful discharge of the ministry" in that place. His widow d. June, 1675.
v. ANNE.[2] She may have m. Philip Bill, who settled at Ipswich, N. E., and afterwards at New London. If so, she became a widow, and m. about 1690, Samuel Bucknell, or Buckland.
vi. THOMAS,[2] was perhaps the early settler at Ipswich, N. E.
vii. SUSAN,[2] m. —— Redington, and was living in England, 1676–7. viii. ABIGAIL.[2] } One of these was probably wife of Thomas Whiting of
ix. SARAH.[2] } Hadleigh, co. Suffolk, Eng. Susan Redington wrote, in 1676–7, in relation to Abigail, that for "her second match she hath a very loueing carefull husband."

2. JOHN[2] (Samuel[1]), b. about 1618; accompanied, or followed, to New England, his father-in-law, Joseph Hills, who came in the "Susan and Ellen," of London, in 1638; was one of the early settlers at Mystic Side (afterwards Malden), where he purchased a house and land of widow Martha Coytemore in 1644; member of the Charlestown church, 1647, and made a freeman in May of that year. In March, 1647–8, the colony allowed him £ 18s. "for his writing one booke of the lawes, and for finding paper for bot bookes." This was the MS. of the celebrated Massachusetts Laws of 1648 compiled and perfected by Joseph Hills, the first body of laws established by authority in New England. After the incorporation of Malden, in 1649 he became a leader in its civil and religious affairs; was a stout supporter of the Rev. Marmaduke Matthews in the strife which followed his unhappy settlement; was clerk and selectman for many years, captain of the train-band, and commissioner to end small causes. In 1666 he succeeded Joseph Hills in the House of Deputies, and continued to represent the town during a period of eighteen years. In 1675, during king Philip's war, he was ordered to convey a detachment to the rendezvous of Maj. Pynchon a Marlboro'; and, in certain contingencies, he was to take command of a company in active service. In 1680 he was appointed a member of the committee to revise the laws, with which his labor in 1647, and his long experience as a legislator had doubtless made him familiar. He was identified with the popular party, and was one of the "faction" denounced by Edward Randolph in his "Articles of high Misdemeanor." In 1681–2, with Deputy Gov. Stoughton and others, he was chosen to prepare papers for the agents in England, and "to do therein as in their wisdome they shall see meete for the end proposed," and was a member of the committee to correspond with and to provide for them; and in 1683 he received a nomination to the Magistracy. In 1684 he was chosen Speaker of the House of Deputies; and, becoming deprived of his sight, soon after retired from public life. He died Sept. 26, 1693, æt. 75. He m. first, in England, Mary dau. of Joseph and Rose Hills, who d. Nov. 25, 1674; second, August 4, 1675, Sarah, widow of Jacob Parker of Chelmsford, who d. Jan. 13, 1707–8, æt. 81. Children:
